Future Homemakers From Here Attended State Meeting

The Appomattox Chapter of the Virginia Association, Future Homemakers of America, received the Outstanding Chapter Award at the thirteenth annual FHA convention which met at Hotel Roanoke June 11-14. Appomattox Chapter received this award for its excellent program of work, which has contributed to the growth and development of each of its members, for the achievement of its members in homemaking activities, school, and community service, leadership, and public relations.

Miss JoAnn Beamer, representing the 58 members of the Appomattox Chapter, accepted the award. Mrs. Madeline Thomas and Mrs. Lucy S. Green are chapter advisors.

The club was judged outstanding because of its many and varied projects. Each member contributed something to the club.

Th club is affiliated with the Campbell County-Appomattox Federation.

Miss Frances Carson, of Appomattox was last year's secretary, and Miss Carole Faye Coach is the president for the coming session. Carole Faye was sent by the Federation to the State Convention as an officer candidate. She was elected State Secretary for 1958-59.

Growth of members as Future Homemakers may be judged by the degrees which are awarded by the club. This year 18 girls received their Junior Homemaker degrees, three Chapter Homemaker degrees and one State Homemaker degree.

Ten girls plan to attend the FHA-FFA Camp at Magort's Beach, Smithfield, Va.

Each month the club gives an interesting program. Some of the most outstanding were: a talk by an IFFYE student from The Netherlands; slides and a discussion of home life in Denmark by Miss Gudrun Riemann, our exchange teacher from Denmark; a talk on leadership by the Rev. Richard A. Bergdoll and a Civil Defense program.

wonder people are even reading editorials in preference to keeping up with baseball.

I got out of sports writing just in time. I used to write a sports column, many years ago, for a large paper. I signed it with the byline, Raymond Onion, an obvious play on the name of the famous Damon Runyan. But at least we could pronounce the names. I got out just in time, I say, because I just never could bring myself to report: "J'sn grounds to C'm who tosses to Z's'z to retire the side."

Homemakers Items

Garnishes and relishes add a lot to the meal in eye appeal, besides furnishing vitamins and minerals to the diet, according to Mrs. Lee Quinn.

Only a few tools are necessary to make attractive garnishes — a cutting board, a sharp knife, kitchen scissors, a vegetable parer, and an ordinary table fork. Here are a few ideas:

Remove center from raw carrot slices, and crisp in water. In the rings put watercress or carrot sticks.

Cut raw carrot slices with shears to form petals. Make centers, stems, and leaves from scallions.

Slash radish in very thin slices, not cutting all the way through. Soak in ice water to make crisp.

Remove center from cucumber with apple corer. Stuff with seasoned cream cheese. Chill and slice.

Simmer white turnip until tender. Hollow out, and fill with hot peas or lima beans.

Cut strips of carrot lengthwise with vegetable parer. Roll and fasten with toothpicks. Crisp in ice water.

On a slice of raw tomato put one slice of hard-cooked egg. Top with rolled caper-filled anchovy.

On flat slices of pitted olives stand half slices to form chain.

Lay empty orange half on side on cutting board. Scallop edge with knife. Fill with cranberry sauce or combinations of fruit.

Make grated yellow cheese balls. Or form grated cheese in the shape of an apple, with paprika add for a pink cheek and a clove added for the stem and bloom end.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY

To the list of things we eat that may have a direct effect on our teeth must now be added protein. This has become evident in the dietary studies being carried out at the National Institute of Dental Research.

These studies show that in the laboratory, when other dietary factors are controlled, rats develop dental cavities from a protein-deficient diet. These cavities in rat molar teeth are very similar to a type of cavities prevalent in human teeth.

It is most disturbing to note that these cavities also result extensively when rats are fed diets with protein supplied in the form of heat-processed cereals. Skim milk powders find their way into bakery goods, candy and ice cream. Heat-processed cereals are a popular breakfast food.

It was found that lyphollized skim milk powder — dried in a vacuum at freezing temperature—was much less cavity-causing than other milk powders tested.

One very important finding was that rat cavities can be inhibited if the essential amino acid lysine is made adequate in their diet. It would seem that a deficiency of lysine in skim milk powders may be the cause of cavities in the rats tested.

We have long known that long periods of storage has an adverse effect on the vitamin and mineral content of most foods. Researchers tell us that the nutritive value of cereals and milk powders have shown that during preparation and storage there is a loss in the protein fraction.

If the loss is definitely shown to be a causative factor in humans, as it is in rats, ways and means may be found to enrich cereals and milk powders to replace the all-important protein, much as vitamin I has been added to milk, and other needed food values added to bread.

KNOW THE WEATHER
By E. H. Sims

Does a red sunrise mean probable rain in the afternoon—as the old weather proverb contends?

No, a red sunrise is not an indication of rain in the afternoon. Usually it means there is dry weather to the east (dust in the atmosphere) but that does not mean rain is due from the west immediately. Indeed, several dry days may lie ahead.

It is the red sunset which indicates dry weather (not rain), since it is caused by dust in the air to the west—which is on its way toward you, and this air will be over you in a day, more or less. The red sunrise has little use as a weather omen.

Thus, the red sunset is a weather clue, as we explained in an earlier column, but the red sunrise is of little value of a forecaster of weather to come.

Justice and Mercy

Lesson for July 6, 1958

FOR the next three months, the 50 denominations using the "International Uniform Lessons" which these columns follow each week, have chosen the general theme of Social Justice. Since some of our readers, or friends of our readers, may have some questions in their minds about this, let us clear up one or two points right away.

It Won't Wash Out

One thing that preachers hear sometimes, when they preach on social justice or any part of it, is something like this: "Why don't you stick to the Gospel? Social justice is the affair of courts, of politics, it belongs anywhere but in church. You stick to religion and leave social justice alone." Indeed, believe it or not, some ministers who have said a brave word for social justice in exceedingly unjust situations, have been called communists for their pains. Such objectors just aren't familiar with their Bibles. This week's Bible material is mostly from the Old Testament, the next week's is going to be from the New. In either Testament it is made quite clear that social justice is part of true religion.

Not An Invention of Cranks

Some people have an odd misunderstanding about social justice. They think it's a hobby of eggheads, an invention of cranks; at best a special interest, something to be taken or left as you like. At worst (though it is hard to realize any one could be so stupid) it is supposed that social justice is a sort of copyright interest of communism,—a lie which communists themselves are only too happy to spread. The simple fact is this: Social justice means treating all human beings with justice and with mercy. Admitted, it is hard to strike a balance between mercy and justice; nevertheless that is the way every sane person wants to be treated, himself; and the principle of social justice means no more nor less than giving everybody, so far as we can, the same sort of treatment we want (and sometimes demand) for ourselves.

What's Religious About It?

Social justice is everybody's affair, not a hobby for a few. But if this is so, what can be specially religious about it? There are religions that take no interest in this; but we are asking for the Christian religion, the faith of the Bible. Two facts are a vital link joining social justice and religion. One is the fact that the irreligious man is pretty cold to what other people need and rightly want. If I can "get my cut," that's all I ask. When blessings are passed out, I want to be near the head of the line. That's the way the irreligious mind works. Such proverbs as "Look out for Number One." "Every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost," express this selfishness. The second fact linking religion and social justice is that in the Bible, God himself is known as the God of justice and mercy, or as our newer translation puts it, justice and "steadfast love." Human justice is rooted in the fact that we are created by, and responsible to, the God of justice; and human mercy is likewise rooted in the character of the God who made us in his image.

Love Without Hypocrisy

"Let love be without hypocrisy," said St. Paul to the Romans. (Rom. 12:9, A.S.V.) The one commandment Jesus singled out as First, is, Love God with all your heart and mind . . . not half of it! Now it is hard to love God and not love what he stands for. It is impossible to love God and not love the kind of God he is. A person who claims to love God, but who at the same time low-rates or brushes off social justice, raises doubts as to the sincerity of his professed love for God. Can one truly love God and not wish to be like him? Perhaps the greatest single obstacle to Christianity, that is to believing that its claims are true, are the people who with their lips (let us say in hymns or otherwise) protess to love God, and yet in their daily lives show the love only for themselves.

Local Girl Receives State Homemaking Degree

Miss Frances Carson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Carson, of Spout Spring, was recipient of the State Homemaker Degree, which is the top award given by the Virginia Association, Future Homemakers of America, at the final session of the State Convention at Hotel Roanoke, June 11-15. Five hundred delegates and advisors were in attenadnce at this convention.

In awarding of this dregree, Frances was recognized for her outstanding contribution to her home and family, to her local, county and state FHA organization, and to her school and community. She has exemplified a keen interest in the welfare of her family and the improving of home and family living.

Carrying out the main purpose of the national association of Future Homemakers of America, which is to "promote better home and family life for all," Frances carried out the following home projects and activities: "Care and Training of Baby Brother," Home Improvement Planning and Preparation of Family Foods, and Clothing Construction.

As a leader in her local chapter at Appomattox High School, she has assumed the following responsibilities: served as reporter and president of the local FHA club, entered exhibits in fairs and farm shows, and served on many committees. This year she was the Campbell-Appomattox Federation secretary, and took an active part in each meeting.

She has worked diligently to carry out the purposes of the organization, which are designed to assist members to work for good home and family living for all.

Mrs. Madeline Thomas and Mrs. Lucy Greene are chapter advisors and homemaking teachers here.

The FHA is a national organization numbering 500,000 high school girls who are enrolled in Home Economics classes.

Comment On Sports

By Pete Fritchie

As a general rule, the field of sports and the halls of Congress are as far apart as Cas D'Amato and the IBC. I mean you just wouldn't expect them to get together on common ground.

But Congress recently okayed legislation that has a great deal to do with sportsmen throughout the nation — not the pros, but the ordinary Joes who like to get out for a few days of fishing or sailing now and then.

What Congress did was put the final touches on a bill to establish the National Outdoor Recreation Resources Review Commission. Despite the handicap of that official jawbreaker, you're likely to hear a great deal about the NORRRC in the next few years. What the Commission is supposed to do is to make an inventory of the recreation resources of the nation, and also make some recommendations about what sort of policies and programs should be followed in the use of those resources.

The proposal was backed by a number of sportsmen's organizations, such as the Izaak Walton League, the Sierra Club, the Wilderness Society and the Sport Fishing Institute.

Basically, what these far sighted groups want to do is to stop and take stock of what the United States has in the way of recreation areas. They want to do this before it is too late, before therg aren't any recreation areas left for the ordinary Joes.

Our rapidly increasing population threatens to engulf parks, lakes, streams, seashores, and mountains—both public and private. Actually, nobody knows for sure just how much land we have now, or how much is available, or suitable, for recreation purposes. So, in trying to make sure that our children and grandchildren won't be tangling one another's lines every time they cast for a trout in 1980 or after, the first step is to find out what we've got.

After that's finished it will be possible to reach some conclusions about what should be done with it so that the city dwellers of the future —which promises to be a very large part of the population— will have some place to get away from it all, and from each other.

The whole idea sounds sensible to us, and it isn't going to cost Uncle Sugar an awful lot to find out. The bill okayed by Congress asked for $2,500,000 to make the study, and anybody knows that ain't nothing but peanuts. Even if it costs more, it would be worth it.

The import tonnage for Virginia ports in 1957 was 6,328,770, of which 3,830,134 tons was petroleum products and 1,714,652 tons orea and gypsum products, imported at Hampdon Roads, according to the Va. State Chamber of Commerce.

The Port of Alexandria in Virginia was responsible for the import of 75,907 short tons of newsprint paper during 1957.
